Introduction

For more than 15 years, the number of persons who died in the violence that followed the February 23rd, 2002 Camp Street jailbreak and the circumstances of their deaths have been the sources of heated disputation. As part of a public service journalism project to shed more light on that period, Stabroek News has compiled from its archives a list of persons killed between February 23, 2002 and September 2006 along with basic facts surrounding their cases. More details on each case will be carried on line at www.stabroeknews.com. While there will likely be some deaths that may not have been recorded by the newspaper these would only be a small number.

Given the amount of work entailed, the project will continue at a later date up to the point of the death of Rondell 'Fineman' Rawlins on August 28, 2008. It is hoped that this record will aid in fact-based discussion of that period.

The daring escape of five prisoners from the Camp Street Prison on February 23rd 2002 was the catalyst for one of the bloodiest periods in the country's history resulting in hundreds of lives being lost in robberies, police officers being slaughtered and a parallel security arm springing up leading to many men being killed execution-style and with the drug trade playing a major role in key events of that period.

It was during this period that Guyanese first came to learn of drug lord Roger Khan and the role he played in mobilizing fighters against the escapees in a bid to protect his narcotics turf and that of other businessmen. Khan would later be apprehended in Suriname and seized by the US authorities in Trinidad before being flown to the US where he completed a 10-year drug sentence and was deported to Guyana on deported and was questioned about the murders of boxing coach Donald Wilson and journalist Ronald Waddell before being released several days later on station bail. There has been no further word from law enforcement authorities on whether he is the subject of ongoing investigations.

While murders and gang killings had been recurrent problems prior to the jail-break, the scale of the brazen attacks on citizens and police officers and the brutal killings with hints of torture had not been seen prior to the February 2002 to September 2006 period when the last prison escapee was shot dead.

It was a period that also saw Government Minister, Satyadeow Sawh being gunned down as he lay in his hammock, a US diplomat being kidnapped and later freed after a ransom was paid and Home Affairs Minister Ronald Gajraj being forced to demit office after claims that he sanctioned the government aligned-parallel security arm referred to as the 'death squad' or 'phantom squad'. That period also saw parts of Buxton being taken over by prison escapees which saw some villagers being chased out following brutal attacks as they objected to the occupation of the village's backdam and that of neighbouring communities by criminals.

According to Stabroek News' record some 420 persons were killed between February 2002 and September 2006 -30 security officers, 151 persons murdered by bandits and another 239 persons killed during confrontations with members of the joint services, or unexplained circumstances or in other incidents where it was later revealed that drugs were involved. The period saw the youngest robbery victim being a 9-year-old girl while the youngest murder victim was a 12-year-old who was killed when gunmen barged into his parents' home reportedly in search of his father.

When Dale Moore, Troy Dick, Andrew Douglas, Mark Fraser and Shawn Brown shot their way out of the Camp Street prison on Guyana's Republic Day observance in 2002, they left a bloody trail as they killed young prison officer Troy Williams and came as a direct result of the injuries sustained.

As soon as the bandits escaped from Camp Street, an upsurge of robberies and killings commenced coupled with sustained attacks on police officers which began with the slaying on April 2, 2002 of the then feared Superintendent Leon Fraser who was the head of the infamous 'black clothes' police squad. He had been accused of extrajudicial killings and other excesses and was thought to be a prime target of the escapees. Policemen were slain on their way to work and in other circumstances.

With evidence that the criminals were embedded in Buxton, the police attempted to establish a presence in the village. During one of these operations on April 6th, 2002, the police killed Shaka Blair reportedly as he lay in his bed in his Buxton home. That killing led to questions about the police force's conduct and intensified the targeting of policemen even as robberies and murders escalated.

There were repeated armed skirmishes between the police and persons in the backlands of the village and eventually the army was called in and its members set up camp in the village to give support to the police. This did not result in an abatement of the violence and signalled the start of a period where criminologists say that both the police and army were compromised and information was readily passed on to the criminals about when raids would be conducted among other things.

Citizens from villages bordering Buxton were kidnapped and ransom calls made and while a number were released, others were found dead and some remain missing up to today.

Andrew Douglas, the escapee who made a video dressed in military fatigues and armed with a high-powered gun while referring to himself and the others as 'freedom fighters' was the first to be killed. His bullet-riddled body was discovered in gunmen working outside of law enforcement targeting criminals and equipped with intelligence information, sophisticated weaponry and transport.

Bodies of persons, some with criminal pasts, began to turn up in various parts of the city and the East Coast but it was after the notorious Brahmanand Nandalall, also known as 'Bramma', was kidnapped that what was later known as a the 'phantom squad' and 'death squad' commenced operations on a large scale .

Nandalall, who had been linked to the drug trade and had various businesses, was snatched on October 24th, 2002 following a running gunfight in Central Georgetown during which a female passerby was injured. His kidnappers were a group of heavily armed men in bulletproof vests.

Four days later, on October 28th 2002, reportedly without police intervention, Nandalall freed himself. This escape triggered a bloodbath that saw six men killed in various parts of the city. Included in the dead were two of the prison escapees Dale Moore and Mark Fraser and while some of the bodies were discovered in Lamaha Gardens, a few doors away from the home of the then Home Affairs Minister Gajraj, others were found in a car on the East Coast, a house in Campbellville and in Le Repentir Cemetery.

Though the police force said two of the men were killed during a confrontation with its members it could not account for how the four others died and while an investigation was reportedly launched it was never revealed how the men met their deaths.

Shortly after this, another five men were killed execution-style as the taxis they travelled in were waylaid and gunmen opened fire on them cutting down some as they attempted to escape on Robb Street.

included two officers being killed in 2002 when gunmen went on a murderous rampage in Rose Hall, sawing their way into homes and robbing occupants. They also killed a 17-year-old boy who was a candidate at the PPP's just concluded congress.

In early 2003 the criminals kidnapped US diplomat Stephen Lesniak-who was the then Regional Security Officer as he played at the Lusignan Golf Course. He was released several hours later. It was believed that a ransom was paid and shortly after the kidnapping Lesniak and the woman who paid the ransom were spirited out of the country. While officials from the United States Federal Bureau of Investigation visited Guyana no official findings of the investigation were revealed.

While there was talk about the parallel security arm being in operation as the police on many occasions were unable to provide an explanation for the many bodies that were turning up, it was on June 5th 2003 that this newspaper saw evidence of the private force. During an explosive two-hour standoff at a Prashad Nagar home between police and gunmen, this newspaper witnessed armed men with their faces covered with ski masks taking part in the operation and being allowed beyond the police barricade. Following this exercise, escapee Shawn Brown and two others were killed.

Death squad

It was after cattle farmer Shafeek Bacchus was gunned down in front of his home in January 2004 that his brother, George Bacchus, rose to the forefront and claimed that he had been the real target of the gunmen. He then made the explosive claim that he had been part of the 'death squad' that was executing persons and that he had wanted to exit the squad hence the attempt on his life which saw his brother Shafeek being killed instead.

squad had the sanction of then Prime Minister Gajraj. The late former Minister had steadfastly denied this.

Bacchus named ex-policeman Axel Williams, himself killed execution-style in December 2003 reportedly by his colleagues in the squad. Telephone records had shown that Gajraj was in constant contact with Williams. He had also sanctioned a gun licence for Williams, who had once killed a food vendor over $20 and who escaped being charged after a recommendation for a murder charge was modified to the holding of an inquest into the death of the food vendor.

Amid ongoing fears that he would still be targeted, George Bacchus himself was gunned down in his bed in his Princes Street home on June 24, 2004. Gajraj, who by this time was being repeatedly accused of sanctioning the killer squad stepped down and called for President Bharrat Jagdeo to conduct a full inquiry.

An inquiry was then set up, chaired by then acting Chief Justice Ian Chang with members Norman McLean and Keith Massiah. At the end of the inquiry, during which the commissioners were forced to subpoena witnesses, it was found that there was no credible evidence that Gajraj was involved in extrajudicial killings.

Soon after the findings, the PPP/C government approved the Minister's return to his office but with the Government under pressure internationally and from the US and other countries he resigned days later and was shortly after appointed as High Commissioner to India where he remained until the Government changed in 2015.

Roger Khan

In 2006 Roger Khan was formally brought into the spotlight when he was named in a US State Department report as a drug lord. His connections to the drug trade were an open secret and he had also been linked to the private gang warfare. On intelligence and they were found with weapons and a laptop device which reportedly could have traced phone calls among other things. Charges were only laid days after and then eventually dismissed at the magistrate's court. Khan was thereafter free to continue his business and it was evident that his connections with the PPP/C government enabled this.

As the police and army closed in on him in 2006 after it was evident that the US was seeking his extradition, a cornered Khan went into hiding but through his lawyers he made statements in which allegations were made that he had assisted both the army and police in fighting crime with the support of the PPP/C Government.

Khan was captured in Suriname on the 15th June 2006 and later taken to the US where he was charged. He later pleaded guilty and was sentenced for drug trafficking. Prior to pleading guilty, several revelations were made which shed light on how some of the persons were killed during the bloody years. Also revealed was that the drug trade played a major part in many of the killings. Then Health Minister D. Leslie Ramsammy was also named as the point person in the Government with whom Khan liaised. Ramsammy has repeatedly denied this.

In the period leading up to Khan's arrest, journalist and government critic Ronald Waddell was gunned down outside his Subryanville home on the 30th of January 2006. On April 22, 2006, Minister of Agriculture Sawh was murdered at his LBI home by gunmen who also killed his brother, his sister and a security guard. Sawh was in his hammock at the time and as he attempted to escape into his home he was cut down with the gunmen entering the home and killing his siblings.

Waddell's and Sawh's murders more than 13 years ago are among the dozens from that period that remain unsolved.

Stabroek News really set out to show that not only young black men were victims of the crime wave but also Indians. It seems that in the first installment alone they have already proven their point. What else can be said? A substantial number of Indians and people of mixed ethnicity are already listed. I never picked up the mantra about systematic killing of young black men but I honestly did not realise that so many Indians had died.

We must never go down this road again. We must never glamorise murder. Going forward we must reject folly as soon as it rears its ugly head. The army also needs to do some soul searching with respect to their conduct during this period because a 'state within a state' was set up right in front of their faces. For the betterment of the army, this period should be studied by officers who were not in the top bracket at the time and that's probably all of them. I believe in calling a spade a spade.

I admit that I never fully understood what went on during this period, but reading this article, it suggests that a bunch of feckless thugs ramp street and used the divisiveness that is common in the country to create mayhem. The government of the day (clueless as usual) hadn't the wherewithal to counter, so the same time rubbing out known criminals and possible rivals. The Police were given a free hand to be judge and jury and were probably paid handsomely for their efforts. As usual, once you go down this route you're bound to become emboldened and turn your attention to law abiding enemies (unfriendly newspapers), there are also the unintended casualties resulting in the deaths of whole families, and in the end you've created a monster over whom you have no

"Leon Fraser was killed in shoot-out with escapees"? Never. This was never ever reported. The nonsense that was said was that there was some abandoned vehicle and he push his head inside - and was shot. I say nonsense because anybody that knows Fraser would know that he would never "push his head" anywhere he cannot see - he probably would have turned that "vehicle" into a strainer - then see who is inside. And the escapees or none of those coward demonic killers in Buxton never ever "shoot back" at Fraser. When Fraser touch down in Buxton even before he comes out of the vehicle he does start licking shots and the info i got was that all man jack use to run to the backlands. I never met Leon Fraser and i have no regrets, but he will always be the most feared man the Guyana Police Force ever produced. Fraser was equivalent to two- thirds of the Force. But i was told he also had a dark side - and im not referring to the extra-judicial killings alone. This is not an endorsement of Fraser but it's an indictment against the rest of the police force and the then Govt of the day - that a few idiots that can hardly handle a gun properly can have an entire country under seige.

So how was this feared man killed? Going up against people "who can barely handle a gun". A man so bad that when he comes to a village he announced his arrival by spraving bullets all over the place. A real bad announced the arrival by spraying bullets all over the place. A real bad man, yet he ended up dead. All I know is that a new bad man is born every day.

Drugs was the day of the order of businesses and the regime turned its back and allowed the murder and crimes against its citizens. because if Roger Khan was allowed to recruit fighters to protect his drug turf and other drug men business what was Jadgeo doing? 155 murder by bandits/239 killed by confrontation with police/30 security officers lost their lives. Which category did Waddle comes under? People who making comments needs to read twice and understand this report by SN .

I went through all 420 entries. This certainly does not read like a targeted attack on Africans by the State Police. And, vet extremely biased individuals pushed this idea over and over in letters and blogs. Too many Indians were killed by bandits. This "too many Indians killed by bandits" argument nails the lie that over 400 blackmen were killed by State police.

Now about the blackmen killed in confrontation with the Police: There should be an COI to document each one - give details (time, place, how they got shot) - this would show they were not involved in innocent pursuit or activity. They were actively involved in criminal activity or were involved in direct confrontation with the police.

Too many Police officers were killed: this suggested some kind of master plan to create paralysis in the State, to make it easier to overthrow the govt.

Govt's are rarely overthrown by banditry. It can only be by a groundswell of discontent - economic hardships - and govt is perceived as unable to ease those hardships suffered by masses of people. There was one person who tried to label this crime wave perpetrated by bandits as an armed popular revolt. He tried to fabricate justifications for the mayhem. This man's name is Ogunseye.

Ogunseye is connected to the PNC. He got a high paying job with the PNC govt as his just reward.

SN Staff is too young and most of them are of the belief Guyana History started in 1992.

Since you insist the manor born need to know stuff, permit this old timer to shed some light on Wismar near Hurudaia (16 miles from Mack City [McKenzie]) on July 6,1964.

On that day, at approximately 4:00 pm / 16:00 hours the river launch Sun Chapman owned and operated by Norman Yacoob Chapman was blown out of the water and over 40+ passengers died.

It was rumored, that event was in retaliation of an event that occurred in BUXTON after a couple was murdered.

Thanks for giving me the opportunity in sharing the gospel truf with dem young ones and their parents over dey and hay.

A remarkable public service by Stabroek News. Remember, however, that the action started a new nights after the 1997 general election result was announced. Perhaps SN can do something on that period as well. Does president Granger have the guts to launch a Inquiry from 1997 to 2006?

It began with the MASH Breakout in 2002 (Monica Reece falls in a different category. Nothing to do with crime wave unleashed on the nation by FIVE BANDITS who broke out of the Jail).

Nobbie your post suggests you are a little sick. Instead of telling people about their underwear you should check yourself in to the nearest Psychiatric hospital for an evaluation.

Guyanese must never return to this era, this was the darkest time in Guyana history, stabroek news has not mentioned the hundreds that disappear without a trace, just look at the amount of Afro Guyanese some of them bothers, their lives just rubbed out like it was nothing, Guyanese never again, the intellectual authors are back in position, just waiting to grab the reins of power even if through the backdoor, stand alert Guyanese, guard your freedom you got for the past 4 years, protect it at all cost.....

Moderator's note: SN has done its job. You can now present the hundreds of disappeared.

Your proactive investigation will certainly dispel the canard that "400 Black men were executed by the PPP." Sadly, some care little for facts and truth.

It's important to note that it's SN and not the Granger Gov't that has taken up the challenge of conducting this investigation after calls from some in the Black community. Their demands for a Col into the alleged mass killing of these 400 Blackmen apparently is neither convenient or important to Mr. Granger.

Journalism at it's best SN! It's still a mystery how the PPP denied your application for a Radio/TV broadcasting license while approving those of friends and family.

"Their demands for a Col into the alleged mass killing of these 400 Blackmen apparently is neither convenient or important to Mr. Granger."

Why further inquiry when the first inquiry (George Bacchus fingering ex-policeman Axel Williams and Minister of Home Affairs Ronald Gajraj) reported there was no credible evidence that Gajraj was involved in extrajudicial killings.

Mind you, this was the same Home Affairs Minister who in January 1978 while an officer of the GDF was convicted of stealing the soldiers payroll of the Training Wing and sentenced to two years imprisonment in the big house located in the grid square of Camp / Bent / John / Durban Street, Werk-en-Rust.

Nota Bene : Post 1992, the PPP found Gajraj to be FIT and PROPER for a Ministerial position.

How about an inquiry into the panelist at the first inquiry and see if that turn out better than the one recently held for a Guyanese of distinction, Brother Walter Rodney, formerly of Bent Street, W/Rust.

This current PPP does not care about the living standards and general welfare of the families of its supporters.

There is need for some form of (government) intervention in the lives of people in the rural areas of Guyana.

The youths must have a sense of wholesome values inculcated in them. There is a lack of responsible Community Leaders. The religious ones too have failed everybody .

A new Constitution must require all (male) youths to serve the Nation in the GDF or the Police for at least ONE year. This will instill a sense of personal discipline, which is visibly lacking among Indian youths, especially.

A rotation to different Military Bases around the Border Regions will acquaint the recruits with Guyana's natural beauty and different people. This shared living (quarters) of different races will serve to promote greater understanding, trust and unity especially among Indians and Blacks.

We will learn in no uncertain terms that we have so much more in common as living human beings than as a five year voting bloc for a particular party.
